Analyzing National Response to Internal Displacement Caused by the Great East Japan Earthquake

Background

With the growing awareness of governmental responses to disasters especially by the occasions of Great East Japan Earthquake, not only people living in tsunami and earthquake stricken areas but also citizens in general are starting to wonder whether the responses and treatment of victims or evacuees are truly reasonable and legitimate. While the globalization and information and communication technologies are expanding on the one hand, it has become more and more difficult to develop the essentials of responses especially in unprecedented situation such as GEJE on the other hand. However, it is important to protect the dignity of individuals regardless of the conditions in the first place, and it would be helpful to analyze the situation with a human rights perspective not only for the government but also for other actors such as international organizations, local authorities, private companies, and the civil society.

Theme of the Seminar & Symposium

In this context, the concept of "Internally Displaced Persons" is meaningful to reconsider the situation of evacuees and people living in shelters, as there have been several guidelines and standards of treatment of IDPs under civil strife and disaster with human rights perspectives. On the other hand, voices and situation including social and legal systems in Japan need to be clarified to apply the guidelines realistically.

She has worked extensively throughout Africa as well as in the Americas, Asia, the Balkans and the Caucasus.

For more than a decade (1995-2006), she advised the Representative of the UN Secretary-General on IDPs (Francis Deng, Walter Kälin), from 2001 as Senior Adviser. At the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (1995-2001), primary responsibilities concerned IDPs and the mandate on "Human Rights and Mass Exoduses". From 2001-2006, she served as the first Deputy Director of the Brookings Institution Project on Internal Displacement, with which she has collaborated since 1995. She also was the first Deputy Director of the Centre for Displacement Studies of the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies (2002-2005). Since end 2005, Mooney is one of a small cadre of senior protection experts deployed by the UN to advise and support UN Country Teams on strengthening the protection response to humanitarian crises. She is a regular consultant to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and to organizations including the UN Secretary-General's Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict, UN Departments of Political Affairs and Peacekeeping Operations, International Organization for Migration, U.S. Agency for International Development, Canadian Armed Forces, and international NGOs. From 2008-2010, she was Adjunct Professor in International Relations at the University of Toronto. In addition to publishing widely in scholarly publications, she has authored numerous international, regional and national policy and strategy documents as well as operational field guidance for field staff and tools for legislators and policy-makers on a wide range of IDP issues. She has been a member of the Editorial Advisory Board of Forced Migration Review since 1999. Mooney has been also advising the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina for UNHCR and the Council of Europe Development Bank; the opposition armed movements participating in the African Union-UN peace process for Darfur; the Internal Displacement Monitoring Centre; while continuing to undertake research on IDP issues for the Brookings Institution.

Currently she is working at the UNHCR Representation in Yemen.
